Alternative Video (Against TV)

One of the major, all-time purposes sustained by the multinational industries in the electronic media is the controlling of massive information release, particularly that transmitted by TV.

It is, in fact, not a chance event that large corporations should manage satellite communications. This encroaching upon the massive culture which will not stay within limits of the entertaining field and gets concerned with infant tuition reveals the colonialist nature of their culture for mass consumption which leads to ever increasing power of the rich First World nations.

A vertical relation is thus established where the dominant class assumes absolute control of the communication business, and the development of new technologies as vehicles for specific messages will not only reclaim and domesticate communications but attempt to introduce their own pedagogical material to fast secure their domineering culture.

Their financing of the educative series for children is a long-term investment aiming to convert culture in subsidiary of vested interests.

Through this aggressive strategy of the mass culture popes and their educational experts, that will work up from their children myths and archetypes into a veritable psychosocial conditioning of people, we can see the advent of a new artificial colonization.

And unlike what we have been learning from UNESCO's "Post", a publication in three languages overtly used to promote a seemingly harmless instruction vehicle, the duty of the psychology experts conducting this magazine it is to appease and distort our struggle towards a change.

Speaking for ourselves, we can say as Latinamericans that TV has been a most effective instrument for maligning the revolutionary process in America.

But Superman himself has been consistently losing face, and he had better change his policies lest he becomes a "Supermouse". Offhand, trips to the moon have been considerably reduced.

The artists' intent in alternative Video is for his viewer to understand the actual producing conditions of the works presented (codes) instead of being concerned with apparent, lineal, pictorial, composition, and all other manifest values.

A television audience generally thinks of TV in terms of a spectacle and absorbs it as a solution to his leisure; very few people do regard it as a means of research into reality and free expression, nor is it usual to think of it as a language through which creators communicate their values, codify and transmit their ideology.

The purpose of an aesthetic means such as Video, as well as any action or conceptual message, is to act as a mediating element allowing for the communication process. A social situation can be thoroughly scanned through this means, and stimuli produced which generate meanings registering in the viewers' consciousness.

Through the TV anonymity, where a professor at the recording room end faces thousands of viewers, indirect contact is developed and relations evolved with the tutorial system after the model of the ancient Greek academy. The difference between the groups doing alternative Video in different countries and the conventional, irrationally dull TV is a respect for creativity. A respect as a result of the liberty of structures. And even the lack of them.

Creativity is just not something which impresses or modifies people. Creativity proposes a dialogue to them. It is a form of production.

While it is difficult to imagine a worker can draw a self-satisfying feeling of creativeness in folding and welding tin plates, the Index of his creativity should be a function between the relationship of production and the possibility of changing the working role of the operator.

Other than offering an actual knowledge of the social structure (real life conditions), ideology's function is to insert somehow these conditions into the practical activities sustained by this structure.

In other words, ideology is opposed to science insofar as it does not propose an awareness of the objective reality but a conditioning to the system's practices.

Ideology aims at concealing actual contradictions and reconstructing, at imaginary level, a consistent discourse justifying the insertion of people in the social structure.

From the standpoint of semiology, art is an ideological discourse, hence a semiological system, since a discourse may be construed to mean any sign system.

Through social and natural reality men find their identity, and this meaning thus found constitutes the ideological fact.

Art is a form of signification of reality, i.e. a semiological system whose laws and mechanics are just being explored.

The whole of the ideological system of bourgeois criticism is a set of transparent signs concealing their codes and bound to reach a notable degree of evaluating distortion. It is a filter forced by the pseudo-cultural industry upon the real communication attempted by men.

Video in the artists' hands is developing a new image culture challenging the triviality and cretinism proposed by the TV corporations (representing group interests) instead of serving people's needs.

Whereas the conventional video approach is having everyone sweetly but conclusively accept repression and turning artists into their collaborators, Alternative Video will steal away from the business notion. It will raise a process of awareness in the audience and enable art to serve the aims of free expression and struggling against violence and hate. Technological advances can thus promote art beyond a merely elite activity.

The Alternative Video we are showing at this Third Encounter in the progressive Ferrara community—thanks to the good offices of Franco Farina—pursues our previous encounters at the Institute of Contemporary Art in London (Dec. 74) and at the Espace Cardin in Paris (Feb. 75). Optimist and questioning, it attempts to demonstrate the existence of a different approach which is meant to transgress all rhetorical expectations and to redimension communication channels.

Let us hope these sign systems may soon replace little objects (a source of casual pleasures) and bank accounts, by significant, creative practices well inlaid into our social community.

"Volubilis"

Sets of signs which result from placing unities which develop Independently and meet by chance, one over the other. These unities are: Sign, space, background, surface, body, scent, sound, light. The tape is concerned with apprehending the relationships between the divers fields of activity without intervening reduction, either in advance or subsequently.
Communication is (or isn't) established through different languages, all of which have in common the fact that they are perceived by intuition.

Gestures: André Lepere.
Movements: Patricia Calixte, Monique Lepont, Claudine Lunet, Evelyn Mé-détice.

"John Cage Piece 2"

... "I don't hear any sound before it becomes audible. I don't see any action before it becomes visible" John Cage. This video may possibly not intervene in a cinema practice but as a means which is available within a specific art practice. The idea is to make an experiment on duration by using the sound and the image at their material value. To this effect, the sound band (as an example) is produced from the sound of the mercury blinker used for the neon.
This need not be a picture for the cinema nor is it forcibly a work of art. Bernard Amiard.

Images: Jean L. Cochet.

"Instant Showing Room XVI"

A video documentation of film-ru-tines or equipment aided operations from any motion-pictures. 3 or 4
People on stage imitating conventions as pixilation, multiple dissolves, re-photography, without any aid of equipment and turned toward a video camera.

It could also be seen as a video documentation of that documentation since 2 more video camera record this acting inter alia, and the 3 camera record 3 monitors and 3 loud-speakers desintegrating the visual, audible and other information rebly the 3 camera.

It could be a documentation of anything since people will be walking around, looking about, even ignoring.
To see it as video-art will be quite a job.

"Hygiene of Masterpieces"

The visit to the Museums of Masterpieces which mass media suggests (reproductions, publicity). Imaginary quiet, tucked-away museums which are, however, devoid of power to contemplate "the invisible" or of listening to "the voice of silence". Room

Hutchinson, Peter

after room, number after number (work title, artist's name) we consume the cultural signs, a legacy from our history of aristocratic, bourgeois art. The works and signs through the ages, the schools, or the showrooms, no matter who the authors may be, frames and themes, tell us strictly the same story: they are the cultural institution of Ideological signs; they are the spiritual legitimacy of the prevailing ideology; they work as such and we consume them as such. Which justifies their being impatiently read along the showrooms. Preciosity has taken on a quality of eternity and universality permitting it to elude, up to this date, sociological criticism. A work of art is a tabu. Hygiene of Masterpieces can be ranged in a series of works bearing on museum hygiene and tearing down of masterpieces. Hence

Imai, Norio

"Art Hygiene" —in the artist's own words— is the "cultural scouring"; or the rejection of consecrated culture, and demystifying of the ideological functioning of art. The socio-pedagogical practice of art is proposing is a study in art Ideology.

"Video Third Age"

Imai, Norio

We seek to ascertain whether mass means of communication such as television, are fatally alienation vehicles, or whether they can play the role of a social bringing together. While its use is closely dependent upon the conditions enforced by the different powers-that-be, who will put it to any use as will better serve their own purposes. It is also true that we have as yet failed to find the practical approach that is one day to ensure the exchange role befitting these technological means of communication. Our duty it is to find it.

"The Professor's gestures"

Videotape completed with the participation of Vilem Flusser in Fontevault. Professor of communication theory who develops verbally a theory on human gestures as Forest, behind his camera, captures the gestures of the professor himself. This band is supposed to be "open". In improvisation it is, in fact, an essay about the playing on dialectics between the filmer and the filmee, virtualising in the material duration applied to the magnetic support on which it will be and by get set. This band is, in fact, designed for participation —to an equal extent— of its audience.

"The University of Fallure"

Lasting 10 days and three hours nighttime (9 p.m. through 11 p.m. or 12 p.m.). This tape can be ranged as a manifestation at aesthetical level following closely in the steps of the former surrealist or futurist movements. Along its ten days' duration photographs were taken by way of documentation and at every showing it was attempted to set off another of its dramatic aspects. On the last day, when so many diplomas were handed out to that many failures, a cocktail was organized which included black drink, and the walls displayed the thesis, some of the texts and the speeches delivered on the occasion. The University structure looks similar to the local university. This University Dean is Agustín Merello, a futurologer working with the Cayc Group. #### "The Rakes Progress"

Videotape is nothing more than a sophisticated gloss to magical thinking. I use videotape in a ritualistic way. Video can be an extraordinarily involving narcissistic tool. If I didn't have it around to tickle my fancy I don't know what I do. I intend to make a series of tapes, colorized in pastels, on the evolution of hearing defects.

Myers, Rita

463 West Street, apt. H952
New York 10014 (USA)

"Sleep Performance and Second Thoughts"

R. Myers slept on a makeshift bed during 4 hours, in the main studio of Synapse Cable Communications Network, New York. This was transmitted to all other points on the network while some monitors round her bed received transmissions from a second originating point. Anyone could transmit a message to her. While someone was doing so, a view of the bed and the monitors was transmitted, enabling the participant to see himself virtually present beside her.

Valie Export

Several Weeks after this, "Second Thoughts" was recorded on audio tape and incorporated into the videotape of "Performance"; it is a series of dreams Myers had after the sleeping event.

Narration of "Second Thoughts": Veronica Beirne.

"Voyage into the golden screen"

Based on the Danish composer Per Norgaard's musical composition of the same name. This very unique method of composition is derived from the Infinity Row, a never-ending flow of change and permutation of relationships and tempos. Voyage into golden screen is a voyage into Energy. It begins as an unfolding process in Time Space, undergoing permutation as sound into light forms, journeying into many dimensions to finally arrive to a point of pure golden energy.

"A budding gourmet"

This tape is a realized version of a novel originally disseminated on a series of postcards. It is a part of a body of work having to do with the mask of gourmetism in an imperial yet bourgeois culture. Gourmetism is shown, too, to be a trope in which food represents an aspired-to condition all of the manifestations of which are perceived as commodities. The body of work also reveals the inner colonization of women in the middle strata of a mass industrial culture and shows the sources of the images they draw on in rationalizing their ways of thinking about things.

Klinkowstein, Tom

"Talk given by Mr. Fred Lux at the Lux Clock Mig. Company plant in Lebanon, Tennessee, on Wednesday, September 15, 1954".

Lux is part of a larger work, or series of works, dealing with the manner in which Americans articulate their economic lives and the manner in which these representations collide with each other. The work occupies a terrain between "documentary" and "fiction", shifting self-consciously between the artifice of one modality and the artifice of the other.

Lux is a found object, a rhetorical artifact from the struggle between New England capital and trade unionism in the unorganized South. Lux is a display of an ideologically-determined rhetoric of capitalist efficiency, of "time as value" and of paternalism. As a video persona Lux stands as a demi-Nixon.

Teyssède, Bernard

10, rue Véronèse

"Videovide 2" ("Empty Video 2")

As a girl choir recites publicity jingles, the spectator sees, by alternation, the lips of a cajoling woman and the image of a crowd which resolves itself in the presence of Hitler... Thus the acquiescent audience of Mass Media renders easier a secret but non the less possible, uprising of fascism.

Sony - European Standard - b/w - 30' - V30 Hz - 1/2" open reel - sound.

"Videovide 3" ("Empty Video 3")

An image and sound counterpoint. A pair of eyes stare at the spectator. Thus watched by the screen where he expected a show, this watched watcher is lead to interiorise the sound band consistent of whisperings and bodily noises which emerge as fragments of a poem. This poem was written in February 1971 during a hunger strike started at the Sorbonne in solidarity with the political prisoners and for a reform of the French penitentiary system.

Thenot, Jean Paul

11, rue des Fauvelles
92400 Courbevoie (France)

"Findings of the survey". "Sounding out Colour in 1973".

This experiment was carried out on a representative sector of the people and bears on 15 co'ours. It attempts to find the resonance brought out by, on the one hand, presenting the name of a colour (linguistic aspect) and on the other presenting the materialisation of this colour (perceptive aspect). This forms parts of a series of round-about questioning started in 1972. This practice enables the contacting of all socio-professional categories. Non directive and objectivizing, this manner of surveying is geared to evaluating the resonance and signifying power of certain words, signs or elements, which are presented under a linguistic form (word) and under a perceptive form (reality or reproduction).

This manner of intervention used by Thenot enables the extrapolating to a larger degree of the results obtained over a certain number of people. The posing of questions as well as the subsequent analysis to be made, while not seeking to establish laws, lead to an awareness of a given historical and socio-economic context, conditioning, reflexes and attitudes resulting from social determinisms.
